

Ken Conca and Geoffrey D. Dabelko, eds., Environmental Peacemaking (Washington: Woodrow Wilson Center Press and Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 2002).

This project was cosponsored by the University of Maryland's Harrison Program on the Future Global Agenda and the Woodrow Wilson International Center's Environmental Change and Security Program. Through a series of case studies, the editors and contributors Douglas Blum, Pamela Doughman, Ashok Swain, Larry Swatuk, Stacy Vandever and Erika Weinthal examine opportunities to use environmental cooperation as a foundation for broader forms of regional international peacemaking in several world regions, including the Baltic Sea, Caspian Sea, South Asia, Aral Sea, southern Africa, and along the Mexico-US border.

"There is clearly a need for a book on this topic. The time has come to assess the consequences of environmental institutions and the opportunities they provide for cooperation and initiative."

--Raimo Väyrynen, University of Notre Dame

"Ken Conca and Geoffrey Dabelko have put together an interesting and useful volume on the potential linkages between environmental cooperation and peace...informative and well written...should be read by scholars and policy actors interested in the potential ways environmental cooperations might promote peace rather than violence."

--Rodger A. Payne, University of Louisville
